According to the statistician by a cheese exporter, the cheese in the Belleville Napanee, Picton and Brockville is up to the present to fifteen per cent behind year. The reason advanced is weather, which has been until this week. Last year part of the season was very dry, and if there is more now on, it is expected that of August the make will be at least as much as last year. It has also been fewer in the country, as the short season caused many farmers to lose some of their stock. The wheat crop of 1912 will be the greatest ever harvested in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, thus requiring the farm laborers of the east to recruit and assist in harvesting the world's greatest bread basket. The Government of the respective Provinces state that fifty thousand men will be required for this year's harvest. These will have to be principally recruited from Ontario, and the prosperity of Canada depends on securing labor promptly.

The death occurred Tuesday afternoon of Alderman John Carson, at his residence on Princess street, Kingston. For the past two months deceased had suffered from liver trouble. He was born in Kingston fifty-six years ago, the son of the late Robert Carson, who came from Ireland and established a grocery business to which his sons succeeded. Mr. Carson was an alderman for sixteen years, first entering the City Council in 1881, and became Mayor of Kingston in 1887, holding the record of being the youngest man who ever wore the civic chain of office in the Limestone City, being only thirty-one years of age. He re-entered the Council in 1904 and served till his death. For some years he was the representative of the City Council on the Board of Governors of the School of Mining. He was one of the stalwarts in the Liberal ranks.

KIDNAPPED HIS CHILD.

New York, July 24.—The Herald prints the following:

Kidnapping his son, Thomas, five years old, from under the eyes of the sisters of St. Vincent's Academy, in Willis Place, Newark, N. J., Frank O'Brien, a clerk for the W. H. Carroll Drug Company, of Passaic, N. J., last Saturday, disappeared with the boy.

Mrs. Violet O'Brien, mother of the boy, and the father decided to separate last spring, after seven years of married life. They were married in Toronto, Ont., on December 23rd, 1905, and went to Passaic soon after. Following the separation the child remained in the custody of Mrs. O'Brien.

According to the story told by Mrs. O'Brien in a habeas corpus proceeding, on June 10th, her husband drew up in an automobile and forcibly taking the child from her arms, dashed back into the machine and was driven away. The child was placed in St. Vincent's academy in Newark the same day.

Mrs. O'Brien sued for the custody of her child. The case went before Vice-Chancellor Stevens, of Newark, on June 14th.

At the last hearing on Wednesday, the vice-chancellor decided that the child should remain in St. Vincent's Academy, until the final hearing on July 30th. He gave orders that neither the father nor the mother be permitted to take the boy from the building, but allowed them to visit their son as much as they pleased. Every day the father and mother went to the convent. On Saturday last Mrs. O'Brien called at six o'clock, in the evening and soon after she left Mr. O'Brien called.

The nuns allowed the father to take his son into the court back of the academy, but no one was sent to watch them. It is supposed that the father scaled the wall in the rear of the court with the boy, and, jumping into a waiting automobile, was driven away.

Mrs. O'Brien did not know of the kidnapping until Sunday afternoon, when she called to see her son and was informed he had been spirited away by his father.

On Saturday morning about five o'clock, as the steamer 'North King' was leaving Deseronto on her voyage to Picton, etc., some obstruction got tangled up in one of her paddle-wheels, doing such damage that the boat could not proceed. She remained out on the bay until the 'Jessie Bain' came from Napanee and towed her into port. In the meantime the 'Alex- andria' and 'Brockville' had come in, the four steamers presenting quite an imposing appearance. It was at first thought it would be necessary to bring a tug from Kingston to tow the 'King' to the Limestone City, but about 9 a. m., examination having shown that the damage was not as great as supposed, the steamer de- parted under her own steam.

Then she sighed. "You'll write no more plays, Decima; that's sure and certain! It's a pity, for 'Twixt Love and Love' is doing so very well!"

"It's not at all sure and certain," said Nina. "Why shouldn't I? No one will know that 'Herbert Wood' is Lady Lesborough; and if they did! But you must talk it over with my husband when you meet him to-night."

"To-night!"
"Yes," said Nina, laughing at her tone of awe. "Here is a note from Lady Vivienne. She wants us all to go to the Momus to-night, and come back to supper with them. I am looking forward to it so much!"

The play went splendidly that evening, and Nina, sitting well behind the curtain of the box, was all aglow with pleasure and honest pride in her work. It was sweet to see Vane applauding and looking round the delighted audience with glowing eyes, as if he were saying: "Clap away; shout your hardest, good folk; my wife wrote this play."

They went home to Eversleigh Court, where the Sutcombes had provided a supper, which, if it had not been so substantial, would have been suspiciously like a wedding breakfast; and at Vane's warm greeting and the friendly look in his frank eyes all Polly's awe and nervousness fled.

"I little thought, Miss Bainford, when I was watching you act, with the greatest admiration, that I was looking at my wife's dearest and best friend," he said, as he held her hand in his warm grasp. "I can't tell you how often she and I have spoken of you, or how much I have wanted to see you and—thank you! I hope you will share your friendship for her with me. Will you?"

It was a very happy little party, though every now and then a shadow stole over Vane's face. He could not altogether get rid of the memory of Julian—of the white, livid face, with its black eyes gleaming from their dark hollows.

"What do you think will become of him?" he had asked Letchford and Sutcombe earlier in the evening.

"He'll leave England," said Sutcombe. "Has gone already, no doubt."

"And will drink himself to death or get killed in a drunken row in the slums of Paris or Vienna," Letchford had suggested.

"He must be found," Vane had said, quietly. "He must be found and—provided for."

"We'll put Tressider onto him," was Sutcombe's idea. "He will know better how to track him down than you can."

Vane tried to get his unhappy cousin out of his mind, and, as the supper progressed, had nearly, in

got the gel, right enough. If you mean well by her, if you want to marry her, why not say so—why not do the whole thing in an open and proper manner? Is there any more brandy in that decanter, Sutcombe?" Vane still held him by the arm.

"Presently, presently!" he said, anxiously. "Sir Chandos, on my honor, I do not know where your daughter is—"

Sir Chandos drew himself up with the shadow of his old dignity.

"That's a lie!" he said. "And this proves it!"

As he spoke he fumbled in the pocket of his dress-coat and drew out a telegram and extended it with a shaking hand; Vane seized the telegram and read it—aloud.

"I am alive and well," it ran. "Forget and forgive the past! I want you. Come to me at 24 Ponson Street, Chelsea, this afternoon, five o'clock. Vane."

He stared at the words in silence, and incomprehendingly, for a moment; then he uttered a cry and drew Sutcombe out of the room, closing the door after them.

"My God!" he said, in a whisper. "I did not send this! Don't you see who did! He asked for a telegram form, wrote this message, and must have sent it from the station. We must go at once—at once! Send Letchford in to keep the poor old man quiet till we return! Come! There's not a moment to lose! Five o'clock! Hours ago! Time for—for anything to happen! The worst!"

In five minutes, or less, they were in a cab and on their way. They reached the house—Vane recognized it at a glance—and found it apparently empty. The heavy door at which they knocked remained closed to them.

Vane hailed a policeman. "There is nothing else for it!" he said. In a few words he explained his fears, and the policeman, climbed to the lower window, forced an entrance. He opened the door to Vane and Sutcombe, and, by the light of his lantern, they rushed up the stairs. As they did so a strong odor of chemicals met them.

Vane groaned. He knew that odor! "There's a fire somewhere, sir!" said the policeman. "Curious kind of a smell; quite suffocating! Seems to come from this room. Door's locked!"

"Force it, force it!" cried Vane, hoarsely.

They set their backs to it, and presently the lock gave and they almost fell in. The lantern was raised and its light flashed round the sombre room, in which Vane had eaten his first meal with Julian Shore. The room was so full of the pungent smoke, the horrible mist, that for a time they could not discern anything; then, as some of the fumes escaped by the open door they vane tried to get his unhappy cousin out of his mind, and, as the supper progressed, had nearly, in some measure, succeeded, when Sutcombe's man came to his master's side and said something in a low voice. With a murmur of apology Sutcombe rose and left the room, and presently he returned and quietly beckoned to Vane. Vane went out to him, and Sutcombe shut the door and drew him towards the library.

"I'm afraid something's amiss, Lesborough," he said. "Poor old Chandos Orme is in there. He tells a rambling, incoherent story. He wants to see you, and, hearing you were here, has come on after you."

They entered the library. Sir Chandos was seated at the table, a glass that had contained brandy, which Sutcombe had given him, already empty. He rose and held out a shaking hand to Vane.

"How d'ye do, Vane?" he stammered, uncertainly. "Thought I should find you here. I say, you—you—know—" He paused to shuffle his false teeth into place. "What's the meanin' of all this? I—I don't understand it, don't you know!"

"All what, Sir Chandos?" said Vane, gravely. "Is anything the matter?"

"Anything the matter? Dash it all, you ought to be able to answer that question! Sutcombe, for God's sake, give me another drink! I'm—I'm so upset and shaky that I can scarcely know what I'm sayin' or doin'! Thanks! a little more. I—I like it strong. No—no water. Water's no good; it's the brandy I want!"

They watched him as he drank the neat spirit—he reminded Vane of Julian!—spilling some of it on his quivering chin and down his shirt-front; then he turned to Vane and, in a somewhat firmer voice, repeated his question:

"What's it mean?" he demanded. "Must say it's a deuced queer kind of business; not at all the kind of conduct befitting a gentleman, to say nothing of—personal friend, and a fellow one has trusted—"

"Tell me at once what you mean, Sir Chandos," said Vane.

"I'm talking about Judith; you know that well enough," retorted Sir Chandos.

"About Judith?" Vane's heart began to sink with a dark presentiment. "What about her?"

"Where is she? What have you done with her?" asked the old man, in a peevish tone.

"I!" Vane started. "I can't tell. I've not seen Judith since—for many months."

"Oh, that's all tommy-rot, you know!" snapped Sir Chandos, with impatient irritability. "That dog won't fight. You sent for her—"

"I!" said Vane. "No, no; you're mistaken!"

"No, I'm not!" snarled the old man, fiercely. "It's no good your standing there lying about it. I've—I've got the proof in my possession. You sent for her; you know where she is! And I shay it's not the straight thing between gentlemen, between you and me, who ought to be father-in-law—son-in-law—"

He looked helplessly round and began to feel for the empty glass. Vane caught his arm.

"For God's sake, try to explain what you mean!" he said, earnestly. "You say that Judith is—missing. When—where—how did she go?"

"Oh, drop it, Lesborough! You've that for a time they could not discern anything; then, as some of the fumes escaped by the open door, they saw two figures. One was that of a woman, lying back in one of the antique chairs. The form was motionless, the face white, the eyes wide open and staring. At her feet was stretched out the figure of a man, his face white as hers, his eyes staring upward at the face of the woman whom he had loved and—slain!

They bent over these two awful objects in silent horror, then the policeman shook his head.

"Lady's dead, gentlemen," he whispered.

The man lying at her feet was dead also, his fingers closed in a steel-like grip on her skirt.

Vane staggered to the door of the laboratory. A small flame was still flickering in the spirit furnace, and the deadly fumes were still issuing feebly from the last drops of the infernal compound in the iron crucible.

Sick and faint, half choking—as he had choked in the Wizard's Room!—Vane knocked the pot from its place and, staggering to the window, broke some panes of glass. Then he sprang back to the two motionless figures in the vain hope that the policeman might be deceived.

"No use, sir," he said, with a shake of the head. "They're both dead—dead as they can be. Awful kind o' death, too! An accident, I suppose, in the other room."

"Yes, yes!" Vane got out, hoarsely. "I—I know the man—the lady. It is an accident while experimenting with chemicals—you can see them there."

The policeman nodded, and, going to the window, blew his whistle.

"I must have some help, gentlemen. You'll stay here, please, till my mate comes, and we can send to Scotland Yard."

The friends of Lady Lesborough—and how numerous they are!—are never tired of dilating upon the romance of her life. And yet none of them, excepting the Letchfords and the Sutcombes, those friends of friends, whose lips are closed, know the whole of the story of her life. Few, for instance, are aware that Lord and Lady Lesborough, before they came to live at the Court, were re-married quietly in the quietest of country churches; few know the real story of Julian Shore's crime, and the tragedy at the gloomy house in Chelsea. And, though they know that the Lesboroughs and Sutcombes draw vast wealth from the Great Fairy Isle Gold Company, they do not know the real reason why the earl and countess nearly every years spend some weeks in the island from whence the gold comes, or that those weeks are perhaps the happiest of their happy lives.

It was Lady Fanworthy who summed up the case of Vane and Nina so neatly.

"You see," she said to Vivienne one evening, when they were seated on the terrace at Lesborough, and both the ladies' eyes were half absently watching the earl and countess as they strolled to and fro across the lawn, talking together, like sweethearts, "you see, they are so old-fashioned."

"Old-fashioned?" echoed Vivienne, waking from her reverie.

"Yes. That's why they are so happy. 't is very old-fashioned to be in love at all; it is hopelessly old-fashioned to be in love with your husband or your wife; and, if you are

After this had been done the captain placed his hand on his breast pocket and, feeling the envelope, was satisfied that his dispatches were still there and with a refreshed look on his face went downstairs.

Mr. Randolph received him cordially, glancing inquiringly at Jim, who was coming down the staircase behind the captain. What he saw in the negro's face evidently pleased him very much, for he renewed his attentions to his guest to such an extent that Cartright began to suspect his host to be one of those Virginians who adhered to the Union cause. A darky announced that dinner was ready, and the two went into the dining room, where they found the Randolph family waiting for them. Those at home were Mrs. Randolph, a stately lady, and her two daughters, Carey and Julia, very pretty girls. The sons were all serving in the Confederate army.

"On which side of this fracas are your sympathies, madam?" asked Cartright.

The husband and father took it upon himself to reply. "The fracas, as you call it, suh," he said, "is being disposed of by the armies of the respective sides. We noncombatants have nothing to do with the settlement. We intend to treat you no'the'ners when you come to us as ouah guests. Let me help you, suh, to some mo' of the chicken. Do you prefer the white meat or the dahk?"

Cartright would have preferred both, but, that being out of the question, he said either would do, and doubtless he could have eaten even the bones. Besides, he was observing Carey Randolph, whose southern beauty was especially pleasing to him. The dinner proceeded with marked attention on the part of all the family to the young captain, who, in the presence of a southern matron and her two attractive daughters, strove to make himself as agreeable as possible. The dinner finished, he was conducted to the drawing room, where he sat in the most comfortable chair in the room, surrounded by the Randolph family.

Nothing of moment occurred during this after dinner conversation.

volver. Wid that he tuk the papers from under his shirt next his dirty black skin, and here they are."

The captain seized the envelope, took out the contents, satisfied himself that they were really the dispatches, then fell on his orderly's neck.

"But how in the world could the rascal have got them?" asked the captain, wondering.

"I dunno, sorn. I only know he had 'em."

"There's but one way," the captain went on, half to himself and half to Mike. "He brushed my coat. Doubtless he made the transfer then. But I can't understand how he happened to have the dummy."

"Well, sorr," Mike put in, "before the nagur carried the wather upstairs for you I saw the planther hand it to 'im."

"I see it all," said the captain. "It was a neat trick, and but for you"—He embraced Mike again.

After the surrender Captain Cartright went to Virginia and married Miss Carey Randolph. Then that which might have destroyed an army and ruined the dispatch bearer became simply an interesting episode.

One on the Court.

When John Barton Payne was on the bench he was considered a purist and showed impatience if a lawyer slipped a cog and committed a grammatical error. On one occasion he "called" counsel for an assault upon the king's English with intent to maim and took up the examination of the witness himself. Later in the trial the attorney had considerable difficulty in bringing out the location of a certain ash box, and Judge Payne turned to the witness to say sharply:

"You knew this ash box, didn't you?"

"No, your honor," answered the witness, "but I knew of it."

"One on the court," observed Judge Payne. "Proceed with the case."—Chicago Post.

rounded by the Randolph family.
 Nothing of moment occurred during this after dinner companionship except that the captain, looking out of a window, saw Jim, Mr. Randolph's body servant, riding down the lane leading from the house to the road. Then in a few minutes the officer saw his orderly, Mike Finegan, riding full tilt
 in the same direction.
 Presently Cartright saw Mike riding leisurely back and felt relieved. Rising, he thanked the members of the family for their southern hospitality,
 which he declared was famed all over the world. All were extremely gracious to him and hoped that the fortunes of war would bring him their way again. Mr. Randolph assured him that he would always find a welcome at the manor house. There was an unobserved pressure of the hand between Cartright and Miss Carey Randolph
 and a soft look between the two.
 Then the captain went out, called for the horses to take him and his orderly on their way, and, mounting amid many goodbys, he rode away with Mike at the regulation forty paces in his rear.
 They had not gone far before Mike
 called, "Captain!"
 "What is it?"
 "Are ye shure the dispatches are all right?"
 "Yes." And the captain felt his breast with his fingers.
 "Wouldn't it be well to take 'em out and look at 'em? Them people is bad secesh."
 "They're fine people, anyway," replied Cartright. But he unbuttoned his coat, took out the envelope and looked at it with astonishment. There was no address or army stamp on the upper left hand corner. Tearing off the cover, he exposed blank paper.
 "Great heavens!" he exclaimed.
 "What is it, sorr?" asked Mike, riding up beside his superior.
 "I've been tricked. Some one has substituted this for the dispatches."
 "Beggorra, that's bad!" exclaimed
 Mike.
 The captain was pale and trembling.
 What excuse could he give for his in-caution, his trustfulness? His delinquency might wreck McClellan's army.
 "Orderly," he said, "draw your revolver and put a bullet through my brains; then destroy this blank paper,
 ride on to General McClellan and tell him that we were attacked on our way and robbed of the dispatches.
 You'll do that for me, won't you?"
 "O'im thinkin', captain, that there's a better way o' doin' it."
 "What way?"
 "Presintin' the real dispatches."
 "But they're gone."
 "They mought come back."

NO ONE STRONGER THAN HIS STOMACH.

The celebrated Dr. Abernethy of London was firmly of the opinion that disorders of the stomach were the most prolific source of human ailments in general. A recent medical writer says: "every feeling, emotion and affection reports at the stomach (through the system of nerves) and the stomach is affected accordingly. It is the vital center of the body * * * *." He continues, "so we may be said to live (through) the stomach." He goes on to show that the stomach is the vital center of the body. For weak stomachs and the consequent indigestion or dyspepsia, and the multitude of various diseases which result therefrom, no medicine can be better suited as a curative agent than

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

"Several months ago I suffered from a severe pain right under the breast-bone," writes MRS. G. M. MURKEN, of Corona, Calif. "Had suffered from it, off and on, for several years. I also suffered from heart-burn, did not know what was the matter with me. I tried several medicines but they did me no good. Finally, I was told it was my liver. I did not dare to eat as it made me worse. Whenever I swallowed anything it seemed that I would faint—it hurt so. I grew very thin and weak from not eating. Was told to take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I took five bottles of it, and could feel myself getting better from the first dose. I could eat a little without pain and grew strong fast. To-day I am strong and well and can do a big day's work with ease. Can eat everything and have put on flesh wonderfully. I will say to all sufferers write to Dr. Pierce. He has my undying gratitude."

Ohio and the Buckeye.

The name Buckeye, though of earlier origin, became indelibly affixed to Ohio in the fire eating campaign of 1840, when General William Henry Harrison started out as the Whig candidate for the presidency and shortly became the "log cabin and hard cider" candidate. He was pictured sitting in a rough cabin, a barrel of cider handy to his elbow and strings of buckeyes upon the wall at his back. Cabins of buckeye poles were erected upon wagons and carried in Whig parades. One of the songs of the campaign ran:

We'll wheel it to the capital and place it there late
For a token and a sign of the bonny Buckeye State.

The predecessors of the modern button men were a credit to the trade. In the Harrison campaign they sold Ohio buckeyes throughout the country, canes from the buckeye tree and woven emblems in the shape of the buckeye leaf. Thenceforth Ohio was the Buckeye State.

The unassertive tree, with its worthless nut and fetid bark, is not, it is true, anything to take a vast pride in. But there's no escaping the sobriquet. That is established—possibly for as long as Ohio is a state.—Toledo Blade.

Greenland's Glaciers.

The iceberg has its birth in the rocky fiords of western Greenland. Under the ever present and irresistible pressure of "Greenland's icy mountains," the great ice cap, the remnant of that which once extended down over the northern part of the present United States, countless glaciers move toward the sea from an elevation of 9,000 feet. This sheet of ice covers an area estimated to be from 300,000 to 400,000 square miles or from six to eight times that of New York state. It is believed that its depth in some parts is more than 6,000 feet. The ice gradually moves down the fiords to the sea level, having a greater or less speed, according to the season of the year, some of the glaciers traveling in the summer time as much as fifty or sixty feet a day.—Exchange.

Cookery Points

Demon Cake.

Cream three-quarters of a cupful of butter with one cupful and a half of brown sugar. Add two eggs and a cupful of sour cream in which half a teaspoonful of soda has been dissolved. Sift three cupfuls of flour with a teaspoonful of baking powder, two level teaspoonfuls of cinnamon, half a teaspoonful of cloves and half a teaspoonful of grated nutmeg. Stir the other mixture into these dry ingredients, and when a smooth batter has been formed mix with a paste previously prepared by melting a square of chocolate and then mixing it with a quarter of a cupful of light brown sugar and a quarter of a cupful of hot water. Cook this mixture till it is smooth before adding it to the batter. Just before putting the batter into the pans add a cupful of chopped nuts and fruit—almonds, raisins, citron and so forth, according to the richness desired. This cake may be used as a layer cake or in a shallow loaf form. It does not need a rich frosting, the batter being rich. Creamy sour milk may be used instead of sour cream, but it is wise to add a little extra butter. The almonds should, of course, be blanched and cut in thin strips and the citron into thin shavings.

Mock Game.

Cut some slices of beefsteak into pieces half an inch thick and square. Lay a piece of raw bacon on each and dredge well with flour. Roll up the beef and skewer it in position. Melt some dripping in a saucepan, put in the meat and brown nicely, then add a finely chopped onion, half a teaspoonful of capers, a wineglassful of vinegar and the same quantity of stock. Cover and stew all together very slowly till tender.

Place the meat on a hot dish. Strain

PRESS COMMENTS.

Toronto Telegram—N. W. Rowell has Sir James P. Whitney's sympathy, and that's about all he'll ever succeed in getting from the Ontario leader.

Toronto Mail—It is said that some of the New York gamblers have fled to Canada. We ought to be thankful it was not certain of the New York police.

Galt Reporter—Say, Mr. Toronto Globe, do you want all of us, when visiting your city, to eschew bread when taking lunch at your eating-houses?

Toronto Star—Six Government steamers are now locating icebergs. If it will help them in their search we may state that George Eulas Foster is at present in London.

Ottawa Journal—The conservative party should realize that the era of high protection is past, so far as political safety is concerned, that the tariff must be moderate, sensible and well-placed.

Guelph Mercury—If there's one paper from the Pacific to the Atlantic that hasn't sprung that joke about Great Scott in connection with the Saskatchewan election, will it please do so at once and make the gag unanimous?

Vancouver Province—The versatility of the Canadian climate leaves nothing to be desired. On Dominion Day there was snow in New Brunswick, sunstrokes in Ontario, cyclone in Saskatchewan, hail in Alberta, and sunshine on the coast.

Lethbridge Herald—It hardly matters what naval policy Mr. Borden may adopt. His opinions on the matter have been so various that under almost any circumstances he will be able to claim that he is acting consistently with his declared views.

Victoria Times—These eastern people are so slow. Toronto, with its population of four hundred thousand and wealth in proportion, refused to furnish its Chief of Police with a motor car. The Council actually wanted to know to what public use the Chief would put a car if it were given him.

Hamilton Times—Henri Bourassa comes out in Le Devoir with an editorial seeming to favor annexation under the heading: "The Annexation Sceptre, and Why French-Canadians no Longer Fear It." Isn't it about time that Borden instructed his managers to administer a little punishment to his Nationalist colleague?

Ottawa Journal—If the Conservative leaders realize that the true fighting ground is a moderate tariff, they are the sure victors. The only mistake they can make is championing high tariff. The day for that is past. If an industry cannot be developed and maintained by a moderate tariff, the country is probably better without it.

East Elgin Reformer—Race Hockin, editor of the Orange Sentinel, says the second battle of the Boyne will have to be fought at the Ottawa River. In that case we would advise Race to ride

A Test in Courtesy.

"In banking, as in personal finance," remarked a suburban banker the other day, "the old adage, 'Take care of the pennies and the dollars will take care of themselves,' holds good. Just to illustrate, I've been a banker for thirty years. Courtesy made my success largely. A couple of years ago a woman whose brothers were depositors with us dropped in to see me and said she wanted to open an account. I arranged everything and then asked how much her initial deposit would be. When she said $5 I never quavered. I took it. Two days later she deposited $15,000. That account has never averaged less than $5,000 from that day. See what she was up to? She wanted to know how courteously small depositors were treated."—New York Tribune.

Color Analysis.

It is rather interesting to know how a color can be broken up into its constituent parts. Take, for instance, mauve or Nile green. How can any one tell just what different colored lights compose such a color? It is all done with the prism, that wonderful little three sided piece of glass used in spectroscopes and other instruments. It is done on the same principle as the analysis of sunlight is accomplished by little particles of water in showing the rainbow. There are only seven primary lights. If sunlight containing all colors falls on a red object all the colors but red are absorbed, the red being reflected to our eyes, so we say the object is red. The prism will not split up red into any other colors, for it is a primary color. So is blue. But if purple be tried we get two colors apart, blue and red. We do not find purple in the spectrum, so any color, not found in the spectrum of sunlight is known to be a compound one. It can always be analyzed by the prism.—St. Louis Republic.

After the Mother.

"Does your son take after you?"
"I used to think he was going to, but now that he's in college he shows every sign of taking after his mother."
"That so?"
"Yes; the only thing he's made since he's been there is the debating society."—Detroit Free Press.

Made It Clear.

"Algernon, am I the first woman you have ever loved?"
"Not exactly. I was in love with my teacher at ten and with a circus rider at twelve. But you are the first girl I have ever asked to marry me, my dear."—Washington Herald.

of capers, a wineglassful of vinegar and the same quantity of stock. Cover and stew all together very slowly till tender.

Place the meat on a hot dish. Strain the gravy, thicken it with browned flour. Season with pepper and salt and a tablespoonful of red currant jelly. Pour the gravy over and around the meat and garnish with sippets of toast and pieces of red currant jelly.

Angels' Food Cake.

Take the whites of ten eggs, one cupful of flour, one and a half cupfuls of sugar and one teaspoonful of vanilla extract. Sift the sugar four times, with a teaspoonful of cream of tartar added also a pinch of salt. Beat the eggs until light and dry and add the sugar lightly, then the flour and vanilla. The secret of success is in the mixing and baking. Put together in the order given. Do not use a spoon or beat hard. Beat the eggs with a wire egg beater and use the beater to mix the cake. Bake in ungreased angels' cake pan for forty minutes to one hour. Let the cake cool in an inverted position before removing from the pan. The oven must be a moderate one.

Compote of Apples.

Large and rather tart apples are the best for this purpose. They should be pared and cored and cut into equal parts. Make a sirup with half a pound of lump sugar and a wineglassful of sherry and another of water. Bring it to boiling point.

Drop the apples into this and cook them till perfectly tender, but do not let them break. Lift them out on a plate as soon as done.

When all the apples are cooked boil the sirup a little longer to reduce it and deepen the color by the addition of a few drops of cochineal. Then pour over the apples and serve in a glass dish.

French Cucumber Salad.

Take four medium sized fresh cucumbers, half a cupful of sweet cream, a quarter of a cupful of vinegar and two tablespoonfuls of salt.

Peel the cucumbers and slice thin layers lengthwise until the seeds are reached. Place a layer of cucumber slices in a dish, then sprinkle with a layer of salt. Repeat until all sliced cucumbers are used. Allow to stand several hours on the ice. When ready to use remove cucumbers from the liquid, spread on towel and wipe dry. Place in a bowl and add, alternately, cream and vinegar. Serve on head of lettuce or cress.

Curry Soup.

Peel and slice three apples and three onions. The onions should be sliced from the top to the bottom. Place them in a saucepan with two ounces of dripping and a tablespoonful of curry powder and fry gently without discoloring for about half an hour.

Stir occasionally. Pour in two quarts of plain or fish stock and cook for half an hour. Add enough flour to thicken the soup and boil for three minutes. Season with pepper, salt and a dash of lemon juice and serve with boiled rice.

East Elgin Reformer—Race Hockin, editor of the Orange Sentinel, says the second battle of the Boyne will have to be fought at the Ottawa River. In that case we would advise Race to ride a sea-horse, or use a boat, for if he attempted to cross the Ottawa on a charger he would get the polish washed on his Wellington boots. By the way, the second battle of the Boyne was fought last 21st of September.

Hamilton Spectator—The gift of a series of Dreadnoughts at the rate of one every two years would be very convenient in one respect. It would dissipate the idea of a "Canadian navy." Canada needs nothing like a navy for the mere policing of her waters. A very slight expansion of her present fleet is quite enough for that purpose. Anything at all suggesting a real navy would be comparatively huge affair, and it is doubtful whether it could be produced in Canada economically.

Manitoba Free Press—Politics constrain public men to strange proceedings, sometimes, and it is not hard to understand the attitude of the Maritime Provinces politicians in this regard. Their demand is one which, as they must know perfectly well, Parliament cannot for a moment consider seriously. One vote, one value, must continue to be the principle in this Dominion. There can be no "question" about special arrangements for the Maritime Provinces. That matter must be decisively and finally settled now to prevent possible trouble in the future.

St. John Telegraph and Sun—Only a little while ago Conservatives in this country and Britain were talking about the imperative need for immediate action in naval matters, asserting that unless Canada came to the rescue of the Empire Germany would be upon us to our undoing. Well, Mr. Borden has not yet arrived at a naval policy, and evidently it will still require some time in order to perfect one, especially as he hints that some constitutional reorganization of the Empire will be necessary before he will feel justified in contributing to Imperial defence. This is very awkward for those gentlemen in this country and Britain who have been telling us that the Germans were almost ready to strike.

Beetroot Sauce.

Wash and boil a couple of fair sized beets until they are tender, then remove the skins and cut them in slices. Dissolve half an ounce of butter, mix with it a dessertspoonful of flour and stir in a large teacupful of thin stock or water, adding a little vinegar and pepper and salt.

Boil first, then lay in the slices and salt, root, cover the stewpan closely and stew gently for an hour.

Pour carefully into a hot dish and serve at once.

THE KAISER'S ENVOY

BARON MARSHALL GOES ON DELICATE ERRAND.

The New German Ambassador to Great Britain Has Received the Highest Compliment That Can Be Paid to a Diplomat—The Present Situation Is Critical and Much Hangs on the Baron's Attitude.

It has taken a big man to have won from Europe the compliment that has been paid to Baron Marschall von Bieberstein. It has made his appointment to the German Embassy in London the sensation of a week. He goes there embodying the prize puzzle of European diplomacy. It is certain that he goes to England on no ordinary errand, and the eminence of the man and the body-or-the-tiger nature of his mission make the sensation of his appointment.

Baron Marschall early surprised and alarmed the diplomatic corps at Constantinople by the freedom with which he took the press into his confidence on matters of state. It was his conception of how diplomatic affairs should be conducted—in the broad daylight. But one incidental effect of this—or was it deeply calculated?—has been to make him a thoroughly well known man.

The moment his transfer from the Porte to London was announced a hundred correspondents were ready to wire to their home papers a full description of the new man, his commanding height, his affable disposition, his ability as a musician, his skill as a grower of roses. But these interesting matters scarcely exhausted public curiosity, especially in England, about the diplomatic sensation of Europe.

The English are not to be outdone in punctilious observance of the properties of official procedure, and the British press at once gave him a welcome no less suave than hearty. Yet behind the suavity lurked a considerable anxiety as to what the Kaiser intended by playing his trump card at this moment in the relations of Germany and England. Does Baron Marschall come to frown or to smile, to heighten or to smooth the long-growing tension between the two peoples?

Sir Edward Grey's frustration of Germany's willingness to make war on France over the Morocco question last summer was bitterly resented by Germans of every degree. The national spirit was deeply offended by this high-handed interference. It seems clear now that Sir Edward took too seriously the German attitude, but the resentment was none the less bitter in Germany. Has Baron Marschall been placed where he can do the most good, face to face with Sir Edward, to see that German foreign policy is not again thwarted as it was?

Lord Haldane, British Minister of War, lately made a visit to Berlin, it was said at the invitation of the Kaiser, and admittedly to discuss means for putting Anglo-German relations on a better footing. He has since made another semi-official visit to the German capital, presumably to discuss means for reducing the bitter and costly race in armaments that is beginning to embarrass the two countries. Is Baron Marschall

ing become conscious of dangers in a great game had to take a hand in game and side with German opponents. The own part has recognized ple cannot realize their pansion without reckon above all the other part is Baron Marsch the big game?

The Times is sceptical any man's ability to al mental facts of the Et tion. It has little hop eacy of peace and disa sions. It extends the ne a cordial greeting "wit ing him with expectat ambassador can realize.

Hennequin's Infant Tablets

Save Babies' Lives. For Babies and Small Children. (Made in France.)

Dr. Hennequin's Infant Tablets saved our little girl's life. Three doctors said she would not live. The Tablets cured her.—MR. E. R. McBRIDE, Napanee, Ont.

My baby was so weak from sickness that he could hardly walk. We thought he would die. We could find nothing to help him. I was given a sample package of three Hennequin Tablets; we used them; I saw a change at once. We secured the Tablets and our baby improved every day, and is now a bright, fat, good natured boy; you could not believe he was the same child. They certainly cured my baby and saved his life. I believe them to be the best medicine ever sold for babies. Mothers if your babies are not well take my advice and use these Tablets.—MRS. JAMES RIDDELL, Barrydale, Ont.

We have hundreds of such letters. If the Tablets were not what you need we would not offer to give them away and prepay them. If your baby is not well send for trial package. Hennequin Tablets have the letter "H" stamped upon them—this is your guarantee.

to the German capital, presumably to discuss means for reducing the bitter and costly race in armaments that is beginning to embarrass the two countries. Is Baron Marschell sent to lend his powerful abilities to the same cause? Or does he go as a superior analyst of British national feeling and policy, and to try his hand at checkmating it?

In the last ten years the London embassy has become the most important post in the German diplomatic service. Germany has been pursuing a policy of extra-European expansion. In this she has been brought into collision with England's own strongest interests, and the English, once hav-

THE ALE OF MERIT

FOUR special features in the brewing of sparkling STERLING ALE have contributed in so short a time to make it the Public's first choice.

- 1.—Its purity—Selected malt, choicest hops and pure sterilized water alone are used in the brewing.
- 2.—Its Flavor—Just that appetizing tang that quenches the thirst and pleases the palate.
- 3.—Its appearance—Full of life, free from sediment and clear as crystal.
- 4.—Its cleanliness—Every bottle sterilized in four compartment soaker, making Sterling Ale absolutely germ proof.

Just call for a bottle of STERLING ALE any time you are thirsty, or drink it with your meals. It is a real aid to digestion.

You can keep it on ice in your refrigerator---the cold won't harm Sterling Ale, it is absolutely chill-proof.

LOST OPPORTUNITY

Sir Thomas Lipton tells a humorou-story of a Scotchman who went to a race meeting for the first time in his life. The old man's friends persuaded him to risk sixpence on a horse—a forty to one chance.
With much trepidation, the Scotchman handed out the sixpence, and,
strange to relate, the horse won.
When the bookmaker handed out a sovereign and sixpence to Sandy, the latter could not believe his own eyes.
"Do you mean to tell me I get all this for my sixpence?" he said.
"You do," replied the bookmaker.
"Ma conscience!" exclaimed Sandy.
"Tell me, mon, how long has this thing
been going on?"
Though Sandy had "greenhorn's luck" and "picked the winner" on his first venture, he might not do so again
in 99 times out of 100, as those who
"follow the ponies" could tell him.
The man who wants to place his "saxpences" on a "sure thing" should investigate the Canadian Government's Annuity System, information in regard to which may be obtained at any

MONTREAL, July 22.—Business in Manitoba spring wheat over the cable
from here continues very quiet, but there is a fair demand from foreign buyers
for oats, for which bids were 3d to 4½d
lower than Saturday and in consequence
only a few odd loads were worked. There was some demand from local buyers for Manitoba feed wheat and sales of 25,000 bushels were made at 62c, c.i.f., and 50-000 bushels No. 2 Canadian western oats, at 43½c, c.i.f., for shipment, from Fort William. Local prices for oats were weaker and 1c per bushel lower. There was some enquiry from foreign buyers
for new crop spring wheat flour, but at the prices bid millers were not disposed to make contracts. Local demand increasing and business more active. De-

The old man had not been on good terms with any of his relatives and was equally averse to lawyers. It was inferred that he would leave no will and the rival claimants were ready to do battle, legally of course, for their "rights."

One of the first things found among his papers, however, was a will made out on a BAX Will Form. That settled the matter definitely—there was no fight.

It has been found that it is useless to dispute wills made on the BAX Will Forms. The moral is obvious—to save lawyer's fees and be sure that your wishes will be carried out in case of death—use a BAX Will Form. Each form is accompanied by a specimen will and full instructions for your guidance, but be sure to get a BAX Legal Will Form, as they are copyrighted and indisputable.

For sale by all stationers and druggists at 35 cents, or sent on receipt of price by the BAX Will Form Company, 280 College street, Toronto. Sold by A. E. Paul, Napanee.

The Great Amazon River.

In South as in North America nature does her work on the grand scale, and one of her noblest achievements is the Amazon river. Rising in the Andes, it flows across the continent and discharges into the Atlantic ocean at the equator. The vastness of the area which it drains, amounting to 2,368,000 square miles, will be evident when it is borne in mind that this is more than the area of Russia in Europe and Austria-Hungary. It has a length of nearly 4,000 miles, is navigable for 2,300 miles from the sea and is fed by numerous streams, which in any other country would be ranked as great rivers. In the wet season, which lasts for about eight months, its width varies from five miles to 400. No wonder the Amazon has been called a gigantic reservoir rather than a river.

Milkers—From $40 to $70.

Hogs—F.o.b. $7.35, and $8.20 fed and watered.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, July 22.—At the Montreal Stock Yards, West End Market, the receipts of live stock for the week ended July 20 were 1450 cattle, 1450 sheep and lambs, 1500 hogs and 625 calves. The supply on the market this morning for sale amounted to 600 cattle, 600 sheep and lambs, 1250 hogs and 250 calves.

There was no important change in the condition of the market for cattle to-day except that the feeling was steadier than it has been of late, owing to the smaller offerings and the improved demand, owing to the cooler weather. Really choice steers were scarce. Demand on the whole was fairly good and an active trade was done. A few full loads of choice steers sold at $7.25, but the bulk of the trading was done in cattle at prices ranging from $5 to $6 per cwt. Common and inferior stock met with a slow sale.

Owing to the continued small supplies of hogs coming forward a much stronger feeling has developed in the market since last Wednesday and prices have scored a further advance of 25c to 50c per cwt. The demand from packers for supplies was keen as there is a scarcity of stock on spot and in consequence an active trade was done. Selected lots sold at $9 per cwt., weighed off the cars.

Small meats were about steady as the supply of such was not in excess of the requirements. The demand for lambs was good, but the trade in sheep and calves was only fair, as butchers in many cases had sufficient stock of the latter on hand for the present.

Butchers' cattle, choice, $7.25 to $7.50; medium, $5 to $6; common, $3.50 to $4; choice cows, $5.50 to $5.75; bulls, $3 to $4.25; milkers' choice, each, $75 to $80; common and medium, each, $50 to $70; springers, $40 to $50.

Sheep—Ewes, $3.50 to $3.75; bucks and culls, $3 to $3.25; lambs, $6 to $7.

ARE YOU INVENTIVE?

Here Are Some of the Things That the World Is Waiting For.

Why not try patenting as a hobby? It is a very interesting occupation, and there is a lot of money in it. Sometimes the inventive faculty runs in the family, as in my case, but more often than not the would-be inventor is short of the necessary ideas to work up.

If I had before me representatives of the various well-known trades, I would ask the plumber to make me a portable machine for making joints in lead pipes, such as are used in ordinary house-plumbing. The soldered joint as usually produced is very expensive and unsightly. He would, of course, take advantage of the fact that lead will weld cold, and that a water-tight joint can be made by pressure alone if properly applied. A noiseless w.c. flush is also in great demand, and a wire mesh at each of the water pipe should lessen the noise greatly.

Street-sweeping, as at present conducted, is done very badly.

When it is done at all, there is a diagonal rotating brush which throws some of the dirt in a windrow alongside the track of the machine, and some of it in the eyes of those who happen to be passing. If someone will produce a machine which will clean the street thoroughly and well in regular strips as wide as the distance between the wheels of an ordinary cart, and which shall deposit the dirt in a box or tank on the apparatus itself, he will deserve the thanks and "siller" of the community.

The postoffice requires something in the shape of a stamp cancellor. As things are now, the transmission of our mails is largely retarded by the necessity of cancelling each stamp by hand. To do this and at the same time get a legible postmark is not so easy as one might imagine, when great speed is demanded. There is one patent out now for this work, but it is too costly and complicated for general adoption.

The chemist will find his trouble amply repaid if he succeeds in producing colors which will stand the application of nitric acid and bleaching. We have several colors that are supposed to stand bleaching, but the shades are muddy-looking and rather dark. Give us something brilliant and receive the reward.

Someone has been demanding a machine for pressing scrap tin into tubes or pigs. As it is, such material is very difficult to handle cheaply. Usually there are no two pieces of the same size and shape, and they become so interlaced among each other that it should be more a question of brute force than of anything else to get them compressed into a mass may be carried to a cart, handled by laborers, and charged into a metal furnace.

Anti-magnetizing watch movements have not yet been produced to suit the pocket (in both senses) of the average consumer. As it is, with the introduction of electrical currents of high voltage in every other street building, there is always the danger that one's watch gets magnetized.

The engineer would be doing us a great favor if he were to invent an odorless and noiseless motor-car engine. He should turn his attention to something in the electrical line, an accumulator with very large storage capacity. The air-men would also thank them for an engine of this description. There is plenty of room for improvement in cycle tyres. We want something absolutely puncture-proof, and although there are numerous patents out that are guaranteed to minimize the number of punctures, there is nothing which does its work really well.

One ingenious gentleman invented a tyre with springs between the rim and a solid strip of rubber, the whole covered with a thin cover, but the thing proved unworkable owing to the jolting.

How Caviar Is Cured.

The finest caviar is the bieluga prepared from the roe of the white sturgeon. Little less fine is the sevruga, prepared from the steriated sturgeon. Both are put up at Astrakhan, Russia. According to our consul at Odessa, the roe is rubbed through a sieve with care not to break the grain. It falls into brine, where it remains for three or four hours, after which it is packed in sacks and allowed to drain. This is the only preparation given to the best caviar. The cheaper varieties are more strongly salted. Caviar is digested with each and is one of the finest forms of nourishment, especially for the sick.

THE STAFF OF LIFE.

Bread Is Not Used In Many Poorer Countries.

Baked loaves of bread are unknown in many parts of the world, such as South Austria and Italy and throughout the agricultural districts of Roumania. In the villages of the Obersteiermark, not very many miles from Vienna, bread is never seen.

The staple food of the people is stertz, a kind of porridge, made from ground beechnuts, which is taken at breakfast with fresh or curded milk, at dinner with broth or fried lard and with milk again for supper. This stertz also takes the place of bread in Carpathia and many parts of the Tyrol.

In the North of Italy many of the peasants live on polenta, a porridge made of boiled maize. The polenta, however, is not allowed to granulate, like Scotch porridge or like a solid pudding. It is eaten cold as often as it is eaten hot, and is in every sense the Italian peasant's daily bread.

The Roumanians are held by many scholars to be descended from the Roman colony, says a writer in the Baker's Weekly; in other words, to be cousins of the Italians; and curiously enough a variation of the polenta called mamaliga is the national dish of Roumania.

The mamaliga is like the polenta, in that it is made of boiled maize, but it is unlike the latter in one important respect, as the grains are not allowed to settle into a solid mass, but are kept distinct after the fashion of oatmeal porridge.

The possibility of making bread without flour seems as absurd and impracticable to the modern housewife as did Pharaoh's proposition to make bricks without straw to the Israelites of old. Yet, according to M. Paul Combes, a French scientist, bread can be made of almost any vegetable substance.

M. Combes describes some forms of bread that are in a measure familiar to most people, but some are rather novelties in the culinary line. Bread made of pure oats with the addition of one-fifth of its weight in wheat has the appearance of good bread, but he says it is gray in color and the odor and taste are not agreeable.

He also tells of bread made of rice, of maize flour and mashed potatoes combined, of rye, beans, lentils, the roots of bryonia, iris, septentaria, mandragora and hellebore, and the leaves of aconite. All these, however, with few exceptions, afford only imperfect nourishment and are really of use only in case of extreme necessity.

Probably the most nourishing bread not made from wheat or corn is that which constitutes the chief food of the Corsican mountaineers—that is, bread made from chestnuts without the admixture of any other substance—and it has the combined advantages of being healthful, palatable and easily digested, and it will keep pure and fresh for fifteen days.

Some historians give the Chinese credit for having first baked leavened bread, but nothing definite about their methods in preparing it has been discovered as yet. Suffice it to say that when the Chinese made their bread of wheat 3,000 years before the Christian era, they merely soaked the broken wheat in water, then heated it over a fire.

The art of breadmaking was transmitted from ancient Egypt into Greece, and there are no less than sixty-two different varieties of bread known among the ancient Greeks. They employed in the making of bread a great many kinds of grain

DEADSHOT

How the Name of a Mining Town Was Changed

By F. TRACY EDMONDS

Deadshot deserved its name. It was one of those mining camps that existed half a century ago in which was gathered the toughest population on the face of North American soil. One visiting it now would see an attractive town with paved streets and sidewalks, rows of neat dwellings and spires piercing the branches of shade trees.

But fifty years ago—then there was a different picture. There was but one street, and that was a dirt road lined with log cabins and board shanties. The most pretentious of these were drinking and gambling dens. There was no law nor semblance of law. A few respectable women had gone to the place, but at the time this story opens they were preparing to leave.

The citizens of Deadshot had encouraged the coming of the women, hoping that their presence would have a salutary effect on the rougher element, for the most brutal affairs were perpetrated by a few individuals, and now since within a week after their arrival the ladies were about to turn their backs on Sodom a meeting was called with a view to the adoption of measures that might change their resolution.

The meeting took place in the Empire saloon.

Pete Henshaw arose and said that he had heard one of the women say that if the citizens of Deadshot wanted to become civilized the first thing they must do was to build a church. He therefore proposed that a collection be taken up for that purpose.

No objection being made to the proposition, the hat was passed, and when the offering was summed up the value of all the donations of various kinds, including a dirty pack of cards, was found to be a dollar and fifty-six cents. The movement was a failure.

Cy Allen then made a proposition that met with much more favor. He suggested that the first man who shot another should be fined a thousand dollars to build the church and that a committee of three of the quickest and surest shots be appointed to see when the transgression occurred that the transgressor put up the amount at once or suffer the consequences.

It did not occur to any one to ask what the intended consequences were. All understood at once that the delinquent was to be riddled. The motion was put and carried, the committee whose duty it was to see that when the fine needed for the church was due it should be paid was appointed, and the chairman named another to go to the ladies and ask them to defer their departure until it could be determined whether the action taken would of getting rid of Skinner was to lay in wait for him and shoot him in the back. But the parties concerned not only shrank from an unfair proceeding even with an incubus on the town like Skinner, but knew that to perpetrate such a scheme would bring upon them the contempt of their fellow citizens.

One of the trio, Gus Harbeson, volunteered to pit himself against Skinner. He was to give Skinner cause to kill him. This looked very unselfish, very noble, on the part of Harbeson, but he said that he was intending to try to get an advantage over his enemy that would put him under ground instead of himself. He didn't say how he proposed to accomplish this desirable result, for it was not necessary that he should do so, and his plans might leak out.

Harbeson had been considered the black sheep of his family. He had run away from home when a boy and entered the service of a telegraph company. From there he had gone to sea. After two years before the mast he drifted west in a prairie schooner and now at twenty-two found himself a miner. Young and strong, he feared nothing. Besides, he was in love and had suddenly become sensible of the fact that he should do something to counteract his record, that his sweetheart might be the more inclined to listen to his suit.

Dave Perkins told the girls that a movement was on foot to eliminate Skinner, begging them to wait awhile, and they consented. A week passed, and Skinner was still alive. The young ladies resumed their packing. The citizens who had hoped for much when they had adopted the plan for building the church were discouraged. Skinner seemed to be gathering courage, for he was heard to say that if he did lay himself liable to the fine he didn't believe the committee would dare in his case to attempt its collection. This indicated that he had prepared for a desperate fight and that some of the committee must be sacrificed in order to get rid of him.

The despondency was at bottom level when one morning Skinner emerged from the Empire saloon and, turning eastward, sauntered down the street. He literally bristled with weapons, for he understood that his fellow townsmen wished to get rid of him, and he was resolved that if they did some of them must first bite the dust. There were a number of persons out. But this morning instead of looking at the walking fortress they were staring in the opposite direction at Gus Harbeson, who a few moments after Skinner's appearance had emerged from his own cabin with a very remarkable hat on his head.

"By gum," exclaimed a citizen, "et Harbe hain't got one o' them machines the batters in big cities put on a man's head to take his measure!"

Harbeson walked down the street, receiving the jeers of the citizens. Skinner looked at him with the rest, and the desperado's face broke into a grin. As he and Harbeson drew near together Skinner called out:

"What y' makin' a guy o' y'self that a-way for?"

"Who says I'm makin' a guy o' myself?" retorted Harbeson.

"Y' know y're doin' it y'self," retorted Skinner bristling difficulties in the language of the traveler writes: "The words in a letter are almost entirely different from those used conversely, and those in an ordinary story are again different. Platinum.

Platinum, one of the most useful metals in many ways, was first discovered by the Spaniards on account of its color, plata signifying silver. It was found in the auriferous sands of the river Pinto, in South America, and was unknown in Europe until 1741, when Don Antonio de Ulloa announced its existence in his report of a voyage to Peru. It was not until 1830 that platinum was found to be malleable and ductile by a man named W. H. Hyde of Wallaston. It is largely employed in the manufacture of chemical utensils, owing to its immunity to the effects of acids.

Greece, and there are no less than sixty-two different varieties of bread known among the ancient Greeks. They employed in the making of bread a great many kinds of grain besides wheat and barley, such as rye, millet, rice, and a soft sort of grain from Ethiopia called orindion, a purely Egyptian grain. Strange to say, neither German nor English yeast will sufficiently raise Egyptian flour.

Hans Christian Anderson.

A critic writes of Hans Christian Anderson: "His vanity was perhaps his most salient characteristic. He was photographed scores of times in every position and costume, and he never wearied of new presentments of his strong but unhandsome features. His whims were legion. He had a morbid horror of being buried alive and always set a slip of paper by his bedside bearing the words, 'Seg es skindod' ('I am in a trance'). His hosts often found him an exacting guest, but his little failings were easily pardoned for the sake of his genius and his childlike nature."

A Relic of Barbarism.

In ancient times it was the custom of the victors in a battle to decorate their doorposts with the skulls of the vanquished. With the advance of civilization of course we no longer continue this bit of barbarity, but the custom has not been allowed to drop altogether, as is seen by the stone balls which are often set on gateposts, a relic of a barbarous idea of long ago. In certain parts of Africa the skulls are still used as decorations. Whole villages may be seen with the doorposts of the houses surmounted in this gruesome fashion.

ONE DOSE WAS ENOUGH.

Too Much Prosperity, He Feared, Might Prove His Undoing.

A lawyer picked his way to the edge of the subway excavation and called down for Michael Finnerty.

"Who's wantin' me?" inquired a large, rawboned voice.

"I am," said the lawyer. "Mr. Finnerty, did you come from Castlebar, County Mayo?"

"I did."

"And was your mother named Mary and your father Owen?"

"They was."

"Then, Mr. Finnerty," said the lawyer, "it is my duty to inform you that your Aunt Kate has died in the old country, leaving you an estate of $20,000 in cash."

There was a pause and a commotion below.

"Mr. Finnerty," called the lawyer, craning his neck over the trench, "are you coming?"

"In wan minute," said Mr. Finnerty. "I just stopped to lick the foreman!"

For six months Mr. Finnerty, in a high hat and with hard shoes on his feet, lived a life of elegant ease, trying to cure himself of a great thirst. Then he went back to his old job at one seventy-five a day. It was there in the excavation that the lawyer found him the second time.

"Mr. Finnerty," he said, "I've more news for you. It is your Uncle Terence who's dead now in the old country, and he has left you another twenty thousand."

"I don't think I can take it," said Mr. Finnerty, leaning wearily on his pick. "I'm not as strong as I wance was, and I'm doubtin' if I could go through all that ug'in and live!"

and the chairman named another to go to the ladies and ask them to defer their departure until it could be determined whether the action taken would be effective. The latter consented to give time for a trial, and Deadshot waited for the man who was to build the church.

Pools were made as to who would be the offender. Arkansas Jack, Pete Skinner and Andy Grimshaw were the favorites. Andy Grimshaw was the winner, shooting his man down in cold blood within two days after the passage of the resolution. The committee appointed for the collection of the funds called on him and asked him to fork over. He laughed them to scorn. There was a fusillade, and he fell pierced with three bullets. One of the committee was wounded, but not seriously.

The next man to lay himself liable to the fine was Arkansas Jack. But, taking warning by the fate of his predecessor, he "lit out" before the committee had time to pay him a visit. Results thus far were favorable. One of the worst men in the town had been eliminated by the bullet; another had gone of his own accord. The only unfortunate circumstance was that no fine had been collected for the building of the church.

Pete Skinner, one of the pool favorites, still remained in the town and above ground. He had disappointed his backers in not turning out a winner and was therefore disappointed himself. The reason he was inactive and unharmed was that he had not succeeded in picking a quarrel with any one before his colleagues had sinned and suffered. He was disgusted with the working of the "city ordinance," for he had no mind to give up his favorite amusement and had no money with which to pay for indulging in it.

The ladies were only partially satisfied with the results of the effort to reform the town, and so long as Skinner remained there above ground they had no confidence in a reformation. Two left, and the others began packing up. The citizens were hoping that Skinner would kill some one and give them an excuse to eliminate him. But Skinner got wind of their desires and kept the peace.

There were three young men in Deadshot who had been attracted to three young women who were getting ready to move. These men owned property in Deadshot and not only wished to keep the girls, but to reconstruct the town so that they could induce capital to come in and develop what they believed would give them a fortune. Pete Skinner stood not only between them and the girls, but between them and pecuniary success.

They met one evening to discuss the situation.

Dave Perkins suggested that they draw lots as to which one of their number should shoot Skinner, the other two to chip in $500 apiece to pay the slayer's fine. But Pete was dreadfully quick on the trigger and extremely watchful. He might kill the man to whom the lot fell. If so, what next? Would one of the others take up the fight? And, if the second fell, would the other go the same way? This ending of the conspiracy would be barren of results.

It looked as if the only reliable way

a-way for

"Who says I'm makin' a guy o' myself?" retorted Harbeson.

"Y' know y're doin' it y'self," replied Skinner bristling.

"You say that again!" cried Harbeson augrily.

The bystanders began to get out of the way. There was not a sign of a weapon about Harbeson, but they knew that if he kept up that kind of talk with Skinner a bullet would go through him and might hurt some one else.

"What y' mean sassin' me that way?" snarled Skinner, putting his hand to his hip.

The band of Harbeson's hat was pierced with little round holes. From one of these holes came a puff of smoke. Skinner staggered, put his hand to his hip and got a revolver midway between his waist and his chin when Harbeson inclined his head about five degrees, several simultaneous puffs and reports followed, and Skinner's arm was shattered. Harbeson then turned his head in a horizontal circle. There were more explosions through his miniature portholes, and Skinner fell dead.

By this time every man, woman and child in Deadshot was out of doors to learn what was going on. When those nearest the scene of action saw what had happened they raised a joyful shout, which was taken up by those who were next and borne on down the thoroughfare till it reached the limits of the town. Then all crowded around Harbeson to examine the hat fort he wore on his head. He showed them a battery in the small of his back connected by wires with little guns in his headpiece, while other wires ran down his arms, ending in circuit keys in his hands.

Skinner was buried the same day, and the citizens, after celebrating their relief from gun rule, held a meeting at which they levied a tax on themselves for funds to build the church. The three lovers and their girls were married at a triple wedding, and the name of the town was changed from Deadshot to Harbeson.

A Good Bluff.

An Englishman and an Irishman made a bet which could swim the longest. On the day of the race the Irishman came to the shore in a bathing suit and a large satchel on his back. The Englishman asked him what he had in the bag.

"Provisions for three days," coolly answered Pat.

"The bet's off," said the Englishman as he handed Pat the money.

A few days later he heard that Paddy couldn't swim a stroke.—London Tit-Bits.

Time Limit on Virtue.

"What kind of a fellow is that Mr. Holloway?" asked the traveling salesman of the corner groceryman.

"Honest as the day is long," answered the village merchant.

"How do you know that he is?"

"He says so himself. But, speakin' personal, I advise interested parties to keep on eye on him after sundown."

Polite Assurance.

"Mr. Conductor, do you think this tunnel is perfectly safe for our travel?"

"Don't be afraid, madam. Our company got you in this hole, and we're bound to see you through."

THE THREE GUARDSMEN

By ALEXANDRE DUMAS

PROLOGUE

If you are young and have never read "The Three Guardsmen" do yourself the favor of adding D'Artagnan, Porthos, Aramis and Athos to your list of friends. They are real men, with a story which has interested millions, so that they stand now in the world's mind for courage, loyalty, sincerity and everything else that goes to make up friendship. Their story—that good old tale that holds a worthy place in the classics—has not been equaled in sustained romantic interest by any of its modern imitations, for no one else but Dumas could relate such wonderful adventures of love and war. It is worth while to learn how D'Artagnan, helped by his three friends, defied the power of the real king of France, the great Cardinal Richelieu, helped the queen when she needed assistance so badly and foiled the plots of milady, the fascinating schemer who is considered by many readers the most interesting woman in literature.

If you are older and read "The Three Guardsmen" in your younger days you need no invitation to reread the story. It sticks in the mind as one of the wrist of steel. Fight on all occasions. Fight the more for duels being forbidden, since consequently there is twice as much courage in fighting. I have nothing to give you, my son, but 15 crowns, my horse and the counsels you have just heard. Your mother will add to them a recipe for a certain balsam which she had from a Bohemian and which has the miraculous virtue of curing all wounds that do not reach the heart. Seek M. de Treville, who was formerly my neighbor and who had the honor to be as a child the playfellow of our king, Louis XIII., whom God preserve. He is now captain of the king's musketeers—that is to say, leader of a legion of Caesars, whom the king holds in great esteem and whom the cardinal dreads—he who dreads nothing, as it is said. Still further, M. de Treville gains 10,000 crowns a year. He is therefore a great noble. He began as you begin. Go to him with this letter, and make him your model in order that you may do as he has done."

Upon which M. d'Artagnan the elder girded his own sword around his son, kissed him tenderly on both cheeks and gave him his benediction.

The same day the young man set forward on his journey, furnished with the three paternal presents, which consisted, as we have said, of 15 crowns, the horse and the letter for M. de Treville, the counsels being thrown into the bargain.

On his way D'Artagnan took every smile for an insult and every look as a provocation, whence it resulted that from Tarbes to Meung his fist was constantly doubled or his hand on the hilt of his sword, and yet the fist did

This caused so rapid and complete a diversion to the attack that D'Artagnan's adversary sheathed his sword with the same precision, and from an actor, which he D'Artagnan, stupefied, without his head bound up in a cloth, arose then and, urged for the host, began to descend the stairs. On arriving at the kitchen, the thing he saw was his antagonist calmly at the step of ariage drawn by two horses.

His interlocutor, who appeared through the carriage, was a woman of from thirty and twenty years of age, young and pale and fair, curls falling in profusion over her shoulders; had large blue eyes, rosy lips and hands. "His eminence, then," said the lady.

"This insolent boy has cried he, "and I have gone to find him whom he means to chase escape him as he did before."

CHAPTER I.

The Three Presents of M. D'Artagnan the Elder.

ON the first Monday of the month of April, 1623, the bourg of Meung, in which the author of the "Romance of the Rose" was born, appeared to be in as perfect a state of revolution as if the Huguenots had just made a second Rochelle of it. Many citizens were directing their steps toward the hostelry of the Franc-Meurier, before which was gathered, increasing every minute, a compact group, vociferous and full of curiosity.

When arrived there the cause of this hubbub was apparent to all—a young man. We can sketch his portrait at a dash. Imagine to yourself a Don Quixote of eighteen, a Don Quixote without his corselet, without his coat of mail, clothed in a woolen doublet the blue color of which had faded into a nameless shade between lees of wine and a heavenly azure; face long and brown; high cheek bones, the maxillary muscles enormously developed, an infallible sign by which a Gascon may always be detected. He might have been taken for a farmer's son upon a journey had it not been for the long sword, which, dangling from a leathern baldric, hit against the calves of its owner as he walked.

Our young man had a steed which was the observed of all observers. It was a Bearn pony from twelve to fourteen years old, yellow in his hide, without a hair in his tail, but not without windgalls on his legs, which, though going with his head lower than his knees, rendering a martingale quite unnecessary, contrived nevertheless to perform his eight leagues a day. The appearance of the said pony produced an unfavorable feeling, which extended to his master.

And this feeling had been the more painfully perceived by young D'Artagnan from his not being able to conceal from himself the ridiculous appearance that such a steed gave him, good horseman as he was. He had sighed deeply, therefore, when accepting the gift of the pony from M. D'Artagnan the elder.

"My son," said the old Gascon gentleman, "this horse was born in the house of your father about thirteen years ago and has remained in it ever since, which ought to make you love it. Never sell it. Allow it to die tranquilly and honorably of old age, and if you make a campaign with it take as much care of it as you would of an old servant. At court, provided you have ever the honor to go there, sustain worthily your name of gentleman, which has been worthily borne by your ancestors during 500 years. By these I mean your relations and friends. Endure nothing from any one but Cardinal Richelieu and the king. It is by his courage, please to observe, by his courage alone, that a gentleman can make his way nowadays. Never fear quarrels, but seek hazardous adventures. I have taught you how to handle a sword. You have thwos of iron, a provocation, whence it resulted that from Tarbes to Meung his fist was constantly doubled or his hand on the hilt of his sword, and yet the fist did not descend upon any jaw, nor did the sword issue from its scabbard.

But there, in Meung, as he was alighting from his horse at the gate of the Franc-Meurier, without any one, host, waiter or hostler, coming to hold his stirrup or take his horse, D'Artagnan spied, through an open window on the ground floor, a gentleman well made and of good carriage, although of rather a stern countenance, talking with two persons who appeared to listen to him with respect. D'Artagnan fancied quite naturally, according to his custom, that he must be the object of their conversation and listened. This time D'Artagnan was only in part mistaken. He himself was not in question, but his horse was.

He fixed his haughty eye upon the stranger, who made one of his most knowing and profound remarks respecting the Bearnese pony, upon which his two auditors laughed even louder than before, and he himself, though contrary to his custom, allowed a pale smile to stray over his countenance. This time, there could be no doubt, D'Artagnan was really insulted. Full, then, of this conviction, he said, with a furious gesture:

"I say, sir, you, sir, who are hiding yourself behind that shutter!—yes, you, sir, tell me what you are laughing at, and we will laugh together."

The gentleman withdrew his eyes slowly from the nag to his master and, with an accent of irony and insolence impossible to be described, replied to D'Artagnan:

"I was not speaking to you, sir!"

"But I am speaking to you!" replied the young man.

The unknown looked at him again with a slight smile and, retiring from the window, came out of the hostelry with a slow step and placed himself before the horse within two paces of D'Artagnan.

D'Artagnan, seeing him approach, drew his sword a foot out of the scabbard.

"There are people who laugh at a horse that would not dare to laugh at the master of it!" cried the young man.

"I do not often laugh, sir," replied the unknown, "as you may perceive by the air of my countenance; but, nevertheless, I retain the privilege of laughing when I please."

"And I," cried D'Artagnan, "will allow no man to laugh when it displeases me!"

"Indeed, sir," continued the unknown more calm than ever. "Well, that is perfectly right!" and, turning on his heel, was about to re-enter the hostelry by the front gate, under which D'Artagnan on arriving had observed a saddled horse.

But D'Artagnan drew his sword entirely from the scabbard and following him, crying:

"Turn, turn, Master Joker, lest I strike you behind!"

"Strike me!" said the other, turning sharply round and surveying the young man with as much astonishment as contempt. "Why, my good fellow, you must be mad!"

He had scarcely finished when D'Artagnan made such a furious lunge at him that if he had not sprung nimbly backward he would have jested for the last time. The unknown then per-

had nearly been, became a spectator of the fight, a part in which he acquitted himself with his usual impassibility, muttering, nevertheless:

"A plague upon these Gascons! Put him on his orange horse again and let him begone!"

"Not before I have killed you, poltroon!" cried D'Artagnan, making the best face possible, and never giving back one step before his three assailants, who continued to shower their blows upon him. The fight was prolonged for some seconds, but at length D'Artagnan's sword was struck from his hand by the blow of a stick, and broken in two pieces. Another blow full upon his forehead at the same moment brought him to the ground, covered with blood and almost fainting.

It was at this period that people came flocking to the scene of action from all parts. The host, fearful of consequences, with the help of his servants, carried the wounded man into the kitchen, where some trifling attention was bestowed upon him.

As to the gentleman, he resumed his place at the window and surveyed the crowd with a certain air of impatience, evidently annoyed by their remaining undispersed.

"Well, how is it with this madman?" exclaimed he, turning round as the opening door announced the entrance of the host, who came to inquire if he was unhurt.

"He is better," said the host. "He fainted quite away. We rummaged his valise and found nothing but a clean shirt and twelve crowns, which, however, did not prevent his saying as he was fainting that if such a thing had happened in Paris you should have instantly repented of it."

"Then," said the unknown coldly, "he must be some prince in disguise. Did he name no one in his passion?"

"Yes; he struck his pocket and said, 'We shall see what M. de Treville will think of this insult offered to his protégé.'"

"M. de Treville?" said the unknown, becoming attentive. "He put his hand upon his pocket while pronouncing the name of M. de Treville? What was there in the pocket?"

"A letter addressed to M. de Treville, captain of the musketeers."

The unknown knitted his brows like a man suddenly rendered uneasy.

"The devil!" murmured he between his teeth. "Can Treville have set this Gascon upon me? Host," said he, "could you not contrive to get rid of this frantic boy for me? In conscience I cannot kill him, and yet," added he, with a coldly menacing expression, "and yet he annoys me. Where is he?"

"In my wife's chamber, where they are dressing his hurts, on the first floor."

"Milady must see nothing of this fellow," said the stranger to himself. "She will soon pass; she is already late. I had better get on horseback and go and meet her. I should like, however, to know what this letter addressed to Treville contains."

...such an execution.
"He is a coward indeed, the host, drawing near to I and endeavoring by this li to make up matters with man, as the heron of the fal the snail he had despised before.

"Yes, a base coward," D'Artagnan, "but she—she beautiful."

"What she?" demanded "Milady," faltered D'Art fainted.

"It has been stolen."

"Stolen! By whom?"

"By the gentleman who was here yesterday. He came down into the kitchen, where your doublet was. He remained there some time alone."

"Then that's the man that has robbed me," replied D'Artagnan. "I will complain to M. de Treville, and M. de Treville will complain to the king." He then drew 2 crowns majestically from his purse, gave them to the host and remounted his yellow horse, which bore him without any further accident to the gate of St. Antoine at Paris, where his owner sold him for 8 crowns.

Thus D'Artagnan entered Paris on foot, carrying his little packet under his arm, and walked about till he found an apartment to be let on terms suited to the scantiness of his means. This chamber was a sort of garret situated in the Rue des Fossoyeurs, near the Luxembourg.

As soon as the earnest penny was paid D'Artagnan went to the Quai de Ferraille to have a new blade put to his sword and then returned toward the Louvre, inquiring of the first muslieve each other in order always to present an imposing number, paraded constantly about, armed to the teeth and ready for anything.

The day on which D'Artagnan presented himself the assemblage was imposing, particularly for a provincial just arriving from his province. When he had once passed the massive door, covered with long square headed nails, he fell into the midst of a troop of men of the sword who crossed each other in their passage, calling out, quarreling and playing tricks one among another. He could not help observing that they turned round to look at him, and for the first time in his life D'Artagnan, who had till that day entertained a very good opinion of himself, felt that he was the object of ridicule.

When arrived at the staircase it was still worse. There were four musketeers on the bottom steps amusing themselves with the following exercise, while ten or twelve of their comrades waited upon the landing place their turns to take their places in the sport.

One of them, placed upon the top stair, naked sword in hand, prevented, or at least endeavored to prevent, the three others from going up.

These three others fenced against him with their agile swords, which D'Artagnan at first took for foils and believed to be buttoned, but he soon perceived by certain scratches that every weapon was pointed and sharpened and that at each of these scratches not only the spectators, but even the actors themselves laughed like madmen.

On the landing they were no longer fighting, but amused themselves with stories about women and in the antechamber with stories about the court. On the landing D'Artagnan blushed; in the antechamber he trembled. There, to his great astonishment, D'Artagnan heard the cardinal's policy which made all Europe tremble, and indeed, and

"but is the matter certain?"

"I had it from Aramis," replied the musketeer.

"Indeed!"

"Why, you know it is, Porthos," said Aramis. "I told you of it yesterday. Say nothing more about it."

"Say nothing more about it!" replied Porthos. "What, the cardinal sets a spy upon a gentleman, has his letters stolen from him by means of a traitor, a brigand, a rascal—has, with the help of this spy, and thanks to this correspondence, Chalais' throat cut under the stupid pretext that he wanted to kill the king and marry monsieur to the queen! Let us say no more about it."

"Well, then, let us speak about it, since you desire it," replied Aramis patiently.

"This Rochefort," cried Porthos. "If I were poor Chalais' esquire, should pass a minute or two very uncomfortably with me."

"And you—you would pass rather a sad half hour with the Red Duke," replied Aramis.

"Oh, oh, the Red Duke! Bravo, bravo—the Red Duke!" cried Porthos. "I'll circulate that saying, be assured, my dear fellow. Who says this Aramis is not a wit? What a delightful abbe you would have made!"

"Oh, it's only a temporary postponement," replied Aramis. "I shall be one some day. You very well know, Porthos, that I continue to study theology for that purpose."

"He will be one, as he says," cried Porthos. "He will be one sooner or later."

"Soon," said Aramis.

"My dear fellow, be a musketeer or an abbe. Be one or the other, but not both," replied Porthos. "You know what Athos told you the other day, you eat at everybody's mess. Ah, don't be angry, I beg of you. That would be useless. You know what is agreed upon between you, Athos, and me."

"Gentlemen, gentlemen!" cried the surrounding group.

"Monsieur de Treville awaits M. d'Artagnan," cried a servant, throwing open the door of the cabinet.

At this announcement, during which the door remained open, every one became mute, and amid the general silence the young man crossed the antechamber in a part of its length and entered the apartment of the captain of the musketeers.

CHAPTER III.

The Audience.

M. DE TREVILLE was at the moment in rather an ill humor, nevertheless he saluted the young man politely, who bowed to the very ground, and he smiled on receiving his compliment, the Bearnese accent of which recalled to him at the same time his youth and his country, a double remembrance, which makes a man smile at all ages. But, stepping toward the antechamber and making a sign to D'Artagnan with his hand, as if to ask his permission to finish with others before he began with him, he called three times, with a louder voice at each time, so that he went through all the tones between the imperative accent and the angry accent.

Ferralle to have a new blade put to the Louvre, inquiring of the first musketeer he met with for the situation of the hotel of M. de Treville.

M. de Troisville, as his family was still called in Gascony, or M. de Treville, as he had ended by styling
himself in Paris, had really commenced life as D'Artagnan now did, without a sou in his pocket, but with a fund of courage, shrewdness and intelligence that makes the poorest Gascon gentleman often derive more in his hope from the paternal inheritance
than the richest Pengordian or Ber-richan gentleman derives in reality from his. His insolent bravery, his still more insolent success at a time
when blows poured down like hail,
had borne him to the top of that ladder called court favor, which he had climbed four steps at a time.

Louis XIII. had a real liking for Tre-ville, a royal liking, a selfish liking, it is true, but which was still a liking.
At that unhappy period it was an important consideration to be surrounded by such men as De Treville. Many might take for their device the epithet
of strong, which formed the second part of Treville's motto, but very few gentlemen could lay claim to the faithful, which constituted the first. Louis XIII. made De Treville the captain of his musketeers, who were devoted to the king.

On his part and in this respect the cardinal was not behindhand with the king. When he saw the formidable and chosen body by which Louis XIII.
surrounded himself, this second, or,
rather, this first king of France, became desirous that he, too, should have his guard. These two powerful rivals vied with each other in procuring the most celebrated swordsmen, not only from all the provinces of France, but even from all foreign states. Each boasted the bearing and the courage of his own people, and, while exclaiming loudly against duels and broils, they excited them secretly to quarrel, deriving an immoderate satisfaction or a true regret at the success or defeat of their own combatants. Treville's soldiers formed a legion of devil may care fellows, perfectly undisciplined
as regarded every one but himself.

Loose, half drunk, imposing, the king's musketeers, or, rather, M. de Treville's, spread about in the cabarets, in the public walks and the public sports
shouting, twisting their mustaches, clanking their swords and taking great pleasure in annoying the guards of
M. le Cardinal whenever they could fall in with them, then drawing in the open streets as if it were the best of all possible sports; sometimes killed,
but sure in that case to be both wept
and avenged; often killing others, but,
then, certain of not rotting in prison,
M. de Treville being there to claim them. M. de Treville, adored and obeyed implicitly, was praised to the highest note by these men.

The court of M. de Treville's house,
situated in the Rue du Vieux-Colom-bier, resembled a camp, and that by 6 o'clock in the morning in summer and 8 o'clock in winter. From fifty to sixty musketeers who appeared to re-

to his great astonishment. D'Artagnan heard the cardinal's policy which made all Europe tremble criticised aloud and openly as well as his private life.

"Certes, these fellows will all be either embastilled or hung," thought the terrified D'Artagnan, "and I, no doubt,
with them, for the moment I have either listened to or heard them I shall be held to be an accomplice."

D'Artagnan begged the servant who had put question to him to request
a moment's audience of M. de Treville,
a request which the other, with an air
of protection, promised to convey in time and season.

D'Artagnan, a little recovered from his surprise, had now leisure to study
costumes and countenances.

The center of the most animated
group was a musketeer of great height,
of a haughty countenance and dressed in a costume so peculiar as to attract general attention. He did not wear the uniform cloak, which indeed at that time, less of liberty than of still greater independence, was not obligatory, but a cerulean blue doublet, a little faded and worn, and over this a magnificent baldrick worked in gold,
which shone like water ripples in the sun. A long cloak of crimson velvet fell in graceful folds from his shoulders, disclosing in front the splendid baldrick, from which was suspended a gigantic rapier.

This musketeer had just come off
guard, complained of having a cold
and coughed from time to time affectedly. It was for this reason, he said to those around him, he had put on his cloak.

"Ah, Porthos," cried one of his companions, "don't think to palm upon us
that you obtained that baldrick by paternal generosity. It was given to you by that velled lady I met you

with the other Sunday near the gate Saint Honora."

"No, 'pon honor. By the faith of a gentleman, I bought it with the contents of my own purse," answered he whom they designated under the name of Porthos. "I paid 12 pistoles for it. Is it not true, Aramis?" said Por-thos, turning toward another musketeer.

This other musketeer formed a perfect contrast with his interrogator,
who had just designated him by the name of Aramis. He was a stout man of about two or three and twenty,
with an open, ingenious countenance,
a black, mild eye and cheeks rosy and downy as an autumn peach. His delicate mustache marked a perfectly straight line upon his upper lip. He appeared to dread to lower his hands
lest their veins should swell, and he pinched the tips of his ears from time to time to preserve their delicate pink transparency. He answered by a nod.

This affirmation appeared to dispel
all doubts with regard to the baldrick.
They continued to admire it, but said
no more about it, and, with one of the rapid changes of thought, the conversation passed suddenly to another subject.

"What do you think of the story Chalais' esquire relates?" asked another musketeer. "He relates that he met at Brussels Rochefort, the tool of the cardinal, disguised as a capuchin and that this Rochefort, thanks to his disguise, had tricked M. de Laigues,
like a simpleton as he is."

"A simpleton indeed," said Porthos,

tones between the imperative accent
and the angry accent.

"Athos! Porthos! Aramis!"

The two musketeers immediately
quitted the group of which they formed a part and advanced toward the cabinet, the door of which closed after them as soon as they had entered.

"Do you know what the king said to me," cried M. de Treville, "and that no longer ago than yesterday evening—do you know, gentlemen?"

"No," replied the two musketeers,
after a moment's silence—"no, sir, we do not."

"He told me that he should henceforth recruit his musketeers from among the guards of M. the Cardinal."

"The guards of M. the Cardinal!"
cried Porthos.

"Yes, yes," continued M. de Treville, growing warmer as he spoke, "and his majesty was right. M. le Cardinal related yesterday, while playing with the king, with an air of condolence not very pleasing to me, that the day before yesterday those musketeers, those daredevils, had made a riot in the Rue Feroe in a cabaret and that a party of his guards (I thought he was going to laugh in my face) had been forced to arrest the rioters. You must know something about it! 'Arrest musketeers!

You were among them—you were!
Don't deny it. You were recognized, and the cardinal named you. I don't see Athos! Where is he?"

"Sir," replied Aramis, in a sorrowful
tone, "he is ill, very ill!"

"Ill—very ill, say you? And what is his malady?"

"It is feared that it is the smallpox, sir," replied Porthos, desirous of getting a word in the conversation, "and,
what is worse, that it will certainly spoil his face."

"The smallpox! That's a pretty glorious story to tell me, Porthos! Sick of the smallpox at his age! No, no; but wounded, without doubt—perhaps killed. Ah, if I knew! Messieurs musketeers, I will not have occasion given for the cardinal's guards, who are brave, quiet, skillful men who never put themselves in a position to be arrested, and who, besides, never allow themselves to be arrested, to laugh at you!"

Porthos and Aramis trembled with rage. Without all had heard, as we have said, Athos, Porthos and Aramis called and had guessed from M. de Treville's tone of voice that he was very angry about something. Then curious heads were glued to the tapestry and became pale with fury, for their ears, closely applied to the door, did not lose a syllable of what he said, while their mouths repeated, as he went on, the insulting expressions of the captain to the whole population of the antechamber. In an instant from the door of the cabinet to the street
gate the whole hotel was in a state of commotion.

MARRIAGE CASE HEARD

Appeal of Ne Temere Judgment Opens in London.

Big Array of Legal Talent Assembled Before Privy Council to Argue Regarding Lancaster's Proposed Marriage Law — Mr. Wallace Nesbitt Presents Case — Other Lawyers Speak In Behalf of Various Fiances.

London, July 23.—(C.A.P. Cable).—The Privy Council chamber at Whitehall yesterday was the scene of the opening arguments, which will undoubtedly rank as historic in the annals of Canada. The famous marriage law case referred to the Privy Council came before the Lord Chancellor, Lord Loreburn, Lord Halsbury, Lord MacNaghton, Lord Atkinson, Lord Shaw and Chief Baron Pallas yesterday.

A notable array of counsel appeared in the case. For the Dominion, Wallace Nesbitt, K.C., Eugene Lafleur, K.C., and Geoffrey Lawrence, were present.

P. B. Mignault, K.C., and I. F. Hellmuth, K.C., have to deal with other questions, and R. C. Smith and Aime Geoffrion represent the Attorney-General of Quebec.

Mr. Nesbitt opened with a formal recital of the grounds of the appeal.

The first question was: Has the Parliament of Canada authority to enact in whole or part the recently proposed amendment to the marriage act. Mr. Nesbitt read one of the clauses:

"Every ceremony or form of marriage heretofore or hereafter performed by any person authorized to perform any ceremony of marriage by the laws of the place where it is performed and duly performed according to such laws, shall everywhere within Canada be deemed to be a valid marriage, notwithstanding any differences in the religious faith of the persons so married and within regard to the religion of the person performing the ceremony."

He also read the next section:

"The rights and duties, as married people of the respective persons, married as aforesaid, and of the children of such marriage, shall be absolute and complete, and no law or canonical decree or custom of or in any province of Canada shall have any force or effect to invalidate or qualify such marriage."

Mr. Nesbitt proceeded to read question two: Does the law of Quebec render null and void, unless contracted before a Roman Catholic priest, a marriage otherwise legally binding between (a) persons both Roman Catholic, (b) persons of whom one is Roman Catholic?

The third question was: A or B answered affirmatively, or both, has the Canadian Parliament authority to enact that existing hereafter contracted marriages are legal. Counsel said that the Supreme Court judges were of the opinion that proposed legislation was ultra vires.

"That all-important point," said Mr. Nesbitt, "is that legislation touching the actual contract of marriage as such is within the exclusive power of the Dominion Parliament."

His point was that once two persons agreed to live as man and wife there was a marriage state, who could say such a marriage would be recog-

Bisley Camp, July 23.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Mortimer won the service rifle championship aggregate with 69. Armstrong was second with the same aggregate, winning 100 shillings. McInnes won 50 shillings, scoring 67. Steele, who was eighth, with an aggregate of 67, won 40 shillings.

In the Territorial Aggregate Omundson was 1st, Solater 23rd, Blackburn 54th. Mortimer's winnings totaled about $500. Col. O'Grady says a better team never came to Bisley. The Canadian Press has been asked by the team to voice their appreciation of the colonel and adjutant's kindness and consideration.

This point was that once two persons agreed to live as man and wife there was a marriage state, who could say such a marriage would be recognized only if certain formalities were complied with?

Lord Halsbury intimated that he thought the word marriage depended upon the context in which it was used. A and B might agree to get married and so go through a form of marriage, and yet not after all be man and wife.

Lord Shaw did not agree that it was true a marriage could take place as in a private house, but there must be solemnization in some form.

Following Geoffrey Lawrence, who supported the previous argument, I. F. Hellmuth, K.C., replied to the argument which had so far been addressed to their lordships and mentioned that Mr. Mignault would deal with the further point of the status of Roman Catholics who were married by a minister other than a Roman Catholic priest.

Mr. Hellmuth was still speaking when the tribunal adjourned.

Italian Is Murdered.

Montreal, July 23.—Salvatore Mercurioso, a young Italian, who arrived in this city two weeks ago from Vancouver, was shot and instantly killed at 6.30 yesterday evening by an unknown man, who as yet has not been apprehended.

The shooting occurred in the heart of the Italian district, on St. Genevieve street. There were many people on the street at the time and several men made as if to seize Mercurioso's slayer, but he threatened them with his revolver and disappeared in an alleyway. The two men were seen walking together just before the shots were fired, but did not appear to be quarreling.

Mikado Is Improving.

Tokio, July 23.—The extreme tension caused by the illness of Mutsu-hito, the Emperor of Japan, has generally relaxed, but the attending physicians say that while there is reason to be encouraged, the public must wait a full week before assurances can be given respecting the outcome.

The improvement noted Sunday was maintained yesterday, and the bulletins issued by the court physicians, which are posted on the police boxes and railway stations throughout the empire, indicated that the maladies from which the emperor is suffering have been gotten under control, at least temporarily.

MR. CHURCHILL'S PLAN

Lord of Admiralty Introduces His Proposals For Navy.

In Explaining the First Expenditure of the Coming Year for Defence Purposes, He Says the Whole Outlay Is Entailed by Germany's Move—Premier Asquith Thanks Canadian Government for Promised Aid.

London, July 23.—Right Hon. Winston Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty, introducing in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon the supplementary naval estimates, said that the direct cause of these additional estimates was the new German naval law, which he proceeded to examine in detail. Its main feature, he said, was the increase in the striking force of ships of all classes immediately available, and its general effect was the maintenance of four-fifths of the German navy in full permanent commission. This meant that it was constantly and instantly ready for war. Such preparation was remarkable and so far as he was aware found no example in the previous practice of modern naval powers. The German plans, he added, involved a remarkable expansion of strength and efficiency.

Mr. Churchill, discussing the general question of the growth of modern navies, said that cool study and methodical preparation prolonged over successive years could alone raise the margin of naval power. It was useless flinging money about on the impulse of the moment. The strain we should have to bear would be long and slow. No relief could be gained from impulsive and erratic action.

We should learn from our German neighbors the way in which policy marches unswervingly to its goal. We must have an ample margin of strength instantly ready. There must be ready and systematic development of our naval forces untiringly directed and pursued over a number of years.

"These supplementary estimates," said the speaker, "are, of course, only the first and smallest instalment of the extra expenditure which the new German law entails upon us. The number of ships we shall have to build in the next five years in order to maintain the sixty per cent. standard will have to be raised from the figure at which we had hoped it would stand, namely, from three next year and four, three, four and three in the succeeding years, to five next year and four in each succeeding year.

"The Germans," he added, "are spending about $5,000,000 a year on submarines, and we cannot allow our lead in submarines to be diminished. The estimates also include $800,000 for a fleet repair ship, attachable to the third battle squadron."

It was proposed to raise the number of battleships in full commission from twenty-eight to thirty-three, and there would also be a second fleet, consisting of eight vessels. We should have from the year 1914 and onwards five battleship squadrons, of which four squadrons would be in full commission. There would thus be thirty-three ships against Germany's twenty-nine. This might not, perhaps, be considered a very satisfactory proportion, but having regard for the character of the German plan, it was as we can to their obviously reasonable appeal to be heard in the determination of the Empire's policy and the direction of its affairs. Arrangements such as this are not to be made in a day. They must result in their very nature from deliberations and will probably have to be developed from time to time. But without committing ourselves to any particular form of arrangement, we share with the great Dominions the feeling which, as years have passed, has become more conscious and articulate, that we have a common heritage and common interest, and that in the enjoyment of that heritage and in the discharge of the duties which those interests involve, we are more and more conscious partners one with the other."

After mentioning the necessity of Mr. Borden first making an announcement in Canada, the Prime Minister proceeded to say:

"Whatever that announcement may be, I am perfectly certain that it will be adequate to the dignity and patriotic spirit of the Canadian people, and that we shall receive it here with the utmost gratitude as an acknowledgment that we are true co-partners in this great Empire; that its burdens and responsibilities will be shared between the Mother Country and the Dominions and that we cannot either in peace or war, isolate ourselves from one another."

Sixty Persons Burned.

Mexico City, July 23.—According to reports which have leaked out, a number of passengers in the second-class coach of the passenger train which was attacked by "Zapatistas" between here and Cuernavaca, on Saturday, were burned to death when the rebels set fire to the train. More than 60 people were killed and many were wounded in the assault, and it had been reported that the 30 passengers in the second-class coach were shot down, but it is now said that only nine were slain outright, and that the rest perished in the flames. A strict guard has been placed over all survivors since their arrival here.

The Zapatistas robbed the dead and living and the express car.

Acute Sense of Hearing.

"Yes," said the prosperous lawyer in speaking to a friend, "I had a long wait before I got any practice, but I am certainly satisfied now with my profession and its emoluments. The early days, the waiting for clients, were hard, though. Why, do you know that I got so after awhile that when I heard a footstep on the stairs I could tell ninety-nine times out of a hundred whether or not the person was coming to my office?"

"Well that is strange," replied his friend. "Your sense of hearing must have been very acute."

"Not so much that," replied the lawyer. "You see, I made up my mind that they were not coming to my office, and ninety-nine times out of a hundred I was right."

April in Western Europe.
one of the driest months in the year in England. In the
of England, including London and surrounding counties, the April rainfall is only 1.64 inch.
March, reputed the driest month, has 1.46, while May's rainfall is a quarter of an inch in excess of March. Not only is April a dry but a very cold month. April 10th to 15th was notoriously cold period.
In the western part of Europe
the month which is justly dreaded for severity. Even in Spain this month is severe. In central Spain there is a story that a shepherd promised his flock a lamb if he would temper the flock's suit his flocks. March did the faithless shepherd failed
his promise. In revenge
he allowed three days from April for worse weather than any had in March.—London An-nine. This might not, perhaps, be considered a very satisfactory proportion, but having regard for the character of the vessels, the arrangements proposed would, in the opinion of the Admiralty, be adequate to the needs of the years 1914 and 1915.

Mr. Churchill further declared that the maintenance of local supremacy in the Mediterranean, apart from the general supremacy, would mean a three power standard, plus an additional 60 per cent. preponderance over the strongest naval power. This would impose a burden unjustified by any vital fundamental need. The command of the Mediterranean cannot, he said, be treated, as something wholly separated from the general command of the sea. Any attempt to confine naval supremacy to any particular water was false strategy
and bad politics.

The right way to maintain British interests in the Mediterranean was to employ the smallest number of modern ships, good enough for the work that would have to be done. Even without the Gibraltar battle squadron
the Malta squadrons would be most formidable and unapproachable in speed by vessels of equal power, now building or projected on the Mediterranean.

Touching on the subject of Canada's share in the work of defence, Mr.
Churchill said:

"We have had repeated conferences with Mr. Dorden and his colleagues at the Admiralty, and they are now in possession of all the facts. We discussed with them with the utmost freedom and confidence what action
should be taken to surmount the difficulties obstructing such action.

"Mr. Borden and his colleagues authorized me to say that they shared
this view and that any special action
which the immediate future may require of them will not be delayed.
Pending the settlement of a permanent naval arrangement they wish that the aid of Canada shall be an addition to the existing British program,
directly strengthening the naval forces of the Empire and affording a margin available for its security. They tell me that the action of the Dominion
will not be unworthy of the dignity and power of Canada. More than that, I am not entitled to say. The decision of the Canadian Government will not be announced until the Ministers have returned to Canada. Meanwhile, I would suggest that the less the question is speculated upon the greater the public convenience will be."

Right Hon. Mr. Asquith, the Premier, in the course of his speech, said
with regard to the visit of his Canadian colleagues:

"I believe that the co-operation
which has already begun in council, will, before long, fructify in action. I desire to tender on behalf of this Government our most grateful acknowledgement to Mr. Borden and his colleagues, not only for the spirit in which they have entered into these deliberations, but for the contribution
they have already made to our knowledge of the matter."

"Side by side with their growing participation in the active burdens of the Empire on the part of the Dominions there rests with us undoubtedly the duty of making such response

"Heavy work, severe straining and evil habits in youth brought on Varicose Veins. When I worked hard the aching would become severe and I was often laid up for a week at a time. My family physician told me an operation was my only hope—but I dreaded it.
I tried several specialists, but soon found out all they wanted was my money. I commenced to look upon all doctors as little better than rogues. One day my boss asked me why I was off work so much and I told him my condition. He advised me to consult Drs. Kennedy &
Kennedy, as he had taken treatment from them himself and knew they were square and skillful. I wrote them and got THE NEW METHOD TREATMENT. My progress was somewhat slow and during the first month's treatment I was somewhat discouraged. However,
I continued treatment for three months longer and was rewarded with a complete cure. I could now earn $12 a week in a machine shop before treatment, now I am earning $31 and never loose a day.
I wish all sufferers knew of your valuable treatment.

Among the Commercial Schools of the Dominion, the Peterborough Business College, Peterborough, is freely acknowledged to hold the foremost position. It is the largest and most widely attended Business College in Eastern Ontario and is affiliated with the commercial Educators Association of Canada. The management of this chain trained last year over two thousand young people and placed them in excellent positions. We have had thirty years experience; consequently, ambitious young people, who are desirous of securing a business education and taking a good position, would do well to write at once. Hundreds of young people are studying at home preparatory to entering Business College next fall or winter, and they are paying for their course at their own convenience.
